What one Woman Thinks.

The essence of love is trust.

Hearts need to be fed as much as bodies.

Some people in this world will borrow everything but trouble.

Would you rather be complimented on your looks or on your brains?

A woman thinks she understands how the martyrs felt if she has to wear last year's hat.

A well known man once said that if we had a national dance in America it would be the Vitus' dance.

There may be lots of insincerity in the world, but the knowledge of it should make us thankful for the friends into whose eyes we can look and feel sure of their loyalty.

Does It Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the most severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the only remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. Recommended many years by druggists in the world. Get Green's prize almanac. Martin Friedman. June 22, 1900-cow.

The Little Woman.

The tall girl may be far more imposing in appearance, and she may, by her stately dignity, win universal admiration at great social functions, but her short sister generally entirely eclipses her in the matter of power over the other sex, remarked a man yesterday.

"A queen of hearts"—men's hearts—is almost always little in stature. Men call her "a dear little girl," and feel at ease with her at once, whereas, with a "daughter of the gods, divinely tall," they have often a sense of their own lack of inches, and a feeling that she looks down upon them, maybe, in more ways than one.

Then the little girl, somehow, appeals to their protective instincts, she wants an arm in a crowd, and looks so frail that it is quite evident that she was made to be taken care of. That apparent helplessness is always flattering to a man, for it is a subtle acknowledgment of his superior strength.

Short girls have the advantage over tall ones in another matter—that is, in their comparative immunity from unfavorable notice if they are guilty of flirtation. They are often simply "thoughtless," "high spirited" and "kittenish," when their conduct is such as would be harshly condemned in their tall sisters. It is a funny thing that though short girls have certain decided advantages they rarely like a reference to their inches, except in favorable comparison with one who is awkwardly tall, though probably the girl is not made who objects to being called a "dear little woman."—Philadelphia Times.

"Yes, Willie, papa was out walking, and that coarse, rude Billy Bryan threw rocks at him. He hurt poor papa awfully."—New York Evening Journal.

Our Wine Drinking President.

The Methodist Recorder, the leading paper of the Methodist Protestant church, in an editorial on our wine drinking president has this to say:

William McKinley, as President of the United States, has a character to maintain which is becoming to the official position which he occupies. There is a character which accords with the position of President of the United States which he must maintain or else bring reproach upon the office and the people whose government he represents. Mr. McKinley is also a member in good standing in one of the great and influential churches of the nation. As a Christian and a member of the church of Christ he also has a character to maintain which is becoming to them. And, further, his character as President of the United States must not be made to conflict with his character as a moral man and a Christian.

Being in the public eye his character must be made to harmonize throughout, and always on the side of the dignities of his office both as a president of a Christian nation and as a member of the Christian church. If he fails voluntarily in either respect, his conduct is a legitimate subject for adverse criticism. Because a man is president is no reason why he should not be criticised for lending his influence against Christian ethics and public morals.

Now just here is where we feel that President McKinley has been caught nodding. Neither as president nor as a Christian has his influence been against the liquor power or the drinking habits of the country. Rather has it been on the other side. The position of the president in the matter of the antebellum law is well known and needs not to be repeated here. But the attitude of the president has emphasis from his associations and his relations to the social uses of liquor on his recent western trip. We have before us a letter from Rev. Miss Starr, of Ohio, Ill., which gives facts which, to us, seem inconsistent with a character becoming a president and a Christian.

Miss Starr says:

"I was in Peoria a few years ago, and know it to be a fact that President McKinley was entertained at the home of Mr. Greenhut, and know it to be a fact that President McKinley was acquainted with Mr. Greenhut, and knew his business before coming to Peoria and accepting entertainment in his home. One of the leading Republicans of Peoria, a man who has served in the legislature, and an internal revenue collector, wrote to Senator Cullom, of the presidential party, urging that the President should not stop with Mr. Greenhut, because it would be against him in the coming campaign, but his protest was not regarded. Mr. Greenhut is not only a millionaire liquor dealer, but he is president of the Liquor Trust of the United States, and President McKinley was aware of the fact, having known Mr. Greenhut for several years.

Mr. Greenhut is reported to have spent $20,000 in decorating his house for the occasion. In keeping with the attitude of the president in this matter was the published statement that, on the following Monday evening at the banquet in the auditorium in Chicago, Mr. McKinley "allowed his glass to be filled time after time, from the bottles of the waiters, who, according to the menu card, were distributing 'sauterine,' 'claret,' 'champagne' and 'liquors,'—he in the meantime emptying it as often."

Now all this is apart from policies of expansion or contraction or any other kind of policy, except the policy of maintaining a character which is becoming to a Christian president of the United States. It is not worth while to interpose social usage in extenuation, for wines and liquors were banished from the White House during President Hayes' administration, and Gen. Grant traveled around the world and was dined and banqueted by the aristocracies of the world, and yet he had the courage ever to turn down his glass to social usage. It would be well for the president of the U. S. to remember that it is more important to maintain Christian character than to observe social usages where there is conflict.
